

Acknowledgements

This thesis is the result of a hard and passionate work. Many generous people contributed to it, both directly and indirectly, and I wish to thank them all.

First of all, I sincerely thank Christian Belzil who has accompanied me all along my PhD and provided me support and encouragement. Thanks for his good advices and his availability which helped me to be self-confident in my work. I also thank him for his cooperation as a co-author in the elaboration of the first and third essays. It is a real pleasure to work with him and I hope to keep up collaboration in the future.

I have really enjoyed working in collaboration with Mike Bognanno on the third essay, and I am grateful for his availability. I thank him to have shared with me his knowledge in personal economics and management.

I would like to express my gratitude to the committee members. I thank Thierry Kamionka and Thierry Magnac for having accepted to referee my work. I thank also Pierre Cahuc, Bart Cockx, Jørgen Hansen and Jean-Yves Lesueur. It is an honor for me to have the opportunity to discuss my work with them.

This thesis would never have materialized without the financial and human support of several institutions. University Lyon 2 awarded me a thesis grant and gave me the opportunity to start my career as a teacher.

Most importantly, I want to thank the Group of Analysis and Economics Theory (GATE). It was a fruitful environment to start my career as a researcher. I am grateful to the two successive directors, Jean-Louis Rullière and Marie-Claire Villeval. They gave me the right advices at key moments during my PhD. I wish to single out Stéphane Robin for our discussions “on the field”. I am thankful to Laurent Flochel, Martin Fournier, Nathalie Havet and Agnieszka Rusinowska for assisting me in numerous ways. Many thanks to the administrative and computing staff for their logistic and technical support, in particular to Sylvain Boschetto, Bruno Crevat and Tai Dao.

During my PhD, I also benefited from a research stay in the economics department of University College London. I thank Jean-Marc Robin for his invitation and his availability to discuss my projects.

It is a pleasure to mention the Economics Department of Ecole Polytechnique. I would like to sincerely thank Francis Bloch and Anh Dao Charlès, in the name of the whole team, for their warm welcome in such a stimulating research environment.

I also thank all the PhD students (and ex-PhDs) who contributed to make my PhD a fruitful and enjoyable experience. I convey a special acknowledgement to Julie Rosaz and Béatrice Roussillon, with who I have had the pleasure to collaborate. They have been invaluable colleagues and good friends. Mathias André, Carole Brunet, Elias Einiö, Julien Guitard, Nicolas Jacquemet, Sabrina Teyssier and Isabelle Vialle deserve a special thank for their help and advices. I also thank Bassem and Mohamed Ali Ben Halima, Emilie Dargaud, Essahbi Essaadi, Zied Ftiti, Carole Herbin, Alberto Palermo and Kateřina Strážnická for creating such a great atmosphere and friendship in the office.

My family deserves a special mention for their support and affection. My parents and my brothers have always encouraged me in this project and believed in me. Thanks to my friends who have been a great source of relaxation.

Finally, I would like to thank Vanessa, the one who was my girlfriend when I started the PhD, who became my wife and is now bearing our child. Thanks for her patience, her confidence and her reassuring presence in every moment.
